

ADAM ROSEN: A PROFESSIONAL BIOGRAPHY

Adam Rosen joined the One Page Thinking team as an independent contractor in April 2021. He is currently in his junior year pursuing a Bachelor of Science in Business Administration with a concentration in Finance from The Scheller College of Business at the Georgia Institute of Technology. Adam was selected to participate in the Steven A. Denning Technology & Management Program, a two-year course of study at Georgia Tech where undergraduate students learn together in an integrated program while preserving disciplinary depth in their major fields of study. The emphasis is on experiential learning and working together in interdisciplinary teams to develop comprehensive solutions to real-world problems sponsored by the program's corporate affiliates (e.g., Siemens, Caterpillar, NCR, to name a few).

During the summer of 2023, Adam worked as a finance intern in the Missiles & Defense Division of Raytheon Technologies. During his past year at Georgia Tech, Adam has become involved in a variety of activities to explore his passions. He joined the Georgia Tech Undergraduate Consulting Club as well as the Alpha Epsilon Pi fraternity. For his fraternity, Adam currently serves as a Risk Manager and the Social Media Chair. In the fall of 2020, Adam also led a mental health awareness campaign for his residence hall and distributed bamboo plants to promote mental well-being for his peers.

Since 2017, Adam has worked for his religious temple and youth group in his hometown, Saint Petersburg, Florida. He was responsible for organizing Temple Beth-El's annual art show, managing financial spreadsheets, supervising teen staff, and teaching Hebrew prayer, writing and third grade religious studies on Sundays.

Outside of his academic and professional activities, Adam enjoys hiking, swimming, traveling, and spending time with friends. His love for travel culminated in his study abroad during Summer 2022 where he traveled around Europe and finished his studies with six intensive weeks at Oxford University, where he studied philosophy and international business ethics. He is excited to continue his undergraduate education and develop his professional skills to become a strong leader in the business world.